

time, you can evaluate and prioritize your decisions in traffic. This can help reduce panic and impulsive reactions.

TURNING IN FRONT OF APPROACHING VEHICLES

You'll get better with experience, but it can be challenging to judge how much time you have to turn when facing oncoming traffic. It's better to give yourself too much time than not enough.

Remember approaching traffic has the right-of-way. You can watch oncoming vehicles pass a marker on the side of the road, like a tree, and count how many seconds it takes until they clear the road you want to turn onto.

You can use that time frame to estimate how long it will take the next vehicle to travel the same distance. Then you know when you have enough time to turn safely.
